UPDATE ON NLS TRANSITION TO DIGITAL FORMAT

While cassette technology, the backbone of the current NLS book delivery system, has facilitated a reliable and cost-efficient system since the 1970s, it is now outdated and nearing the end of its useful life. So NLS has begun to implement digital audio technology as the backbone of its future system. The program will continue to provide RCs during the transition, but digital technology will ultimately replace RC technology, just as RC technology replaced its predecessor, the rigid disc technology. The transition to this digital technology is expected to begin in 2008 and should require approximately four years to complete.

NLS has determined that the digital system will be based on flash memory technology, specifically Universal Serial Bus (USB) flash drive technology. The credit-card-sized devices will hold an entire digital book, which will mean no side-selector switch or multi-volume books.

The national library program has always been user-driven. To make prudent design decisions about the new digital system, NLS commissioned a patron survey to help anticipate and proactively address any problems that users might have with digital books and playback machines, to identify possible barriers to acceptance, and to design the new materials to satisfy users' needs. The results from this study have been incorporated into subsequent planning studies for developing the digital-based system.

NLS projects that final testing of player prototypes should be completed by early 2007. By spring 2008, the first 10,000 players will be ready for distribution. More than 20,000 digital talking book titles should be available by the time the players are ready for use.
